Africa needs more tech innovation in the agricultural sector to improve its levels of food security.

BY GISELE STRASSER

IN many ways, including the uptake of smartphones, access to digital financial services and the proliferation of mobile internet, Africa is experiencing a digital revolution. To harness this potential, the continent needs to embrace innovation in the agricultural sector to improve its levels of food security.

In fact, according to the African Agriculture Technology Startup Index (AATS) report, there are 12 countries in Africa, Southern and West Africa, that are considered to be the most innovative in the continent. The report also highlights that the continent has seen an average of 10% increase in the number of agricultural technology startups.

The AATS report identifies a number of key players in the continent's agricultural technology ecosystem, including startups like Farmcrowdy, Twiga, and Farmcrowdy. These startups are leveraging technology to improve the lives of smallholder farmers and increase their productivity.
